Introduction

We live in an ever changing world. One constant has been the increasing threat of viruses and other forms of Malicious Software both created and propagated over the Internet. Email, for example, has become an indispensable tool for most of today's businesses but it's use can open your computing infrastructure up to an unlimited number of threats on a daily basis.

Email and hacking attempts are just the tip of the iceberg. The Computer Security Institute (CSI) in San Francisco estimates that between 60 and 80 percent of network misuse comes from inside the enterprises network. Computing security is not just a set of locked doors and passwords. A truly secure environment is an ever changing entity which requires constant care and monitoring.
